Where Do Germs Hide In Your Office?

Think of objects with handles....

- Toilet flush and faucet handles
- Towel dispensers and phones
- Coffee pot and microwave
- Door knobs and light switches

Did you know that during one research study a coffee pot handle was found to have 34 times more bacteria than a school toilet seat? (...would you like cream and sugar with that or soap and water!)

The study was administered by Hloom, an office provider, which gathered bacteria samples from five common surfaces within different offices – from small workplaces to large corporate headquarters and had them tested at an independent laboratory to determine the prevalence and types of bacteria present. Around 99 percent of the coffee pot handle germs were gram-negative rods, which can cause various infections and may even resist antibiotics.

The same study revealed the office entrance doorknobs and water dispenser handles weren't exactly the picture of cleanliness either. Viruses travel fast where people traffic office spaces as another study reported in the Wall Street Journal that it took only four hours for a (harmless) virus to spread from the front door of an office to over 50 percent of frequently touched surfaces!

One of the many benefits of a clean facility is that it gives building occupants a visual comfort level and reduces employee absenteeism. This has been shown to have a direct impact on a company's bottom-line. A study published in the Journal of Occupational Environmental Medicine in 2003 reported that, based on a random sample of 28,902 United States workers, health-related lost productive time (LPT) costs employers $225.8 billion per year.

Properly trained cleaning technicians are able to maintain a healthy and productive environment for your company. This means increased job satisfaction from your employees' time at work while lowering absenteeism. For employers, it's

Nature's Annual Spectacle: Where to See the Leaves

Fall officially started in September but according to the Travel Channel, October is the prime time to see the best of America's fall foliage.

Early leaf watchers will want to start in the Northeast region to capture the first colorings of fall. Fodor's recommends the Green Mountain Byway in the state of Vermont to discover one of the most iconic displays of the area. The drive moves from Waterbury, the home base for Ben & Jerry's ice cream, to Stowe, which is known for its ski resort. Take advantage of the mountains in the area and stay in a place with a good view. Enjoy the view from afar or while experiencing one of the many hiking trails.

In the Pacific Northwest, Yahoo recommends the Willamette Valley in northwest Oregon. The area has many scenic routes connecting major cities in the state that were intended to show off the area's forests and rock lava formations. To keep eyes on the trees instead of the road, Oregon's Travel Department highlights the network of scenic train rides available across the best leafing country. There are also special stops to enjoy local crafters and photography destinations.

In the south, the Great Smoky Mountains region of North Carolina and Tennessee is a great place to visit until early November and, according to Fodor's, there are over 100 different varieties of trees on display. The National Park Service recommends seeking out less congested viewing spots, like the Roaring Fork Motor Nature Trail to avoid the crowds and move at a leisurely pace. Historic mills, breathtaking waterfalls, and hiking opportunities abound in this area.

Gluten-free Lifestyle May Not Boost Heart Health

If you don't have celiac disease, your heart won't get a boost from going gluten free, according to a new study.

The gluten-free lifestyle is crucial for people with celiac disease. For them eating wheat, barley, and rye triggers the body to attack the small intestine, causing inflammation and leading to malnutrition and gastrointestinal distress. The inflammation then increases heart disease risk. Eliminating gluten stops the attack on the small intestine and reduces inflammation.

What the May study in The BMJ asked is whether people without celiac disease would benefit from going gluten free.

The Harvard research team did not find much of a difference in risk of heart attacks between people who ate the most gluten and those who ate the least.

On the other hand, people who avoided nutritional whole grains had an increased risk of heart disease.

The lesson: Don't have celiac disease? Don't cut whole grains out of your diet and don't worry about going gluten free, according to the Harvard Health Letter.

For a beautiful start in spring: You can store your tropical bulbs

The growing season might be over, but you don't have to say goodbye to your tropical plants. With a little effort, you can have twice as many next spring, and you won't have to spend a lot of money to do it. You can store the bulbs.

For those who have a special liking for elephant ears, cannas, gladioli, dahlias, begonias, caladium, and other exotics, here's how to save bulbs from the winter cold.

After foliage has dried back from the first light frost, trim the top growth, then gently dig up each bulb and brush off excess soil. Discard any that are dried out or rotted.

Spray each bulb with a protective fungicide such as Concern Copper Soap and allow to dry. Keep bulbs in a warm, dry area for a week to ease them into dormancy.

Store the bulbs in a cardboard box. Cover the bottom with newspaper and place the bulbs so they don't touch each other. Cover with peat moss, then make another layer.

Most bulbs prefer a 45 to 55-degree temperature range. Begonias, gladioli, and cannas prefer 50 to 60 degrees.

North America Treat Mystifies Europeans

October through December are prime months for pumpkin pies -- a uniquely North American treat that mainly puzzles Europeans.

In fact, expats routinely complain that finding cans of pumpkin in October and November is nearly impossible on the continent. According to The Guardian, Brits never really understood a vegetable-based pudding and pumpkin has never caught on. In fact, in Europe, most expats end up substituting butternut squash or sweet potatoes for pumpkin.

Nonetheless, North Americans love their pumpkins and it does more than satisfy the taste buds. It wins big time for its nutritional values. A slice of pumpkin pie has up to three times the recommended daily value of beta-carotene plus the phytonutrients lutein and zeaxanthin.

The carotenoids in pumpkin neutralize harmful free radical molecules, while lutein and zeaxanthin are potent free radical scavengers, according to Rutgers University in Brunswick, N.J. A diet that includes these antioxidants can help prevent many of the diseases associated with aging, including heart disease and cancer.

Lutein and zeaxanthin are naturally found in the lenses of the eyes. Studies suggest that eating foods high in these compounds help block formation of cataracts and decrease the risk of macular degeneration.

Canned pumpkin has virtually the same nutritional value as fresh, and it's far less work to prepare.

You can make a nutritious pumpkin pie from a can of pumpkin pie mix or two pies from a 16-ounce can of pumpkin (just add your own eggs, sugar, and spices. The recipe is on the can.)

Some tips about pie made from canned pumpkin: If you find your pie cracks in the center or doesn't hold together well enough, your eggs are probably too small. Use three eggs instead of two.

To reduce the fat content of your pie, (pumpkin itself has no fat) use fat-free canned milk.

If you will use whipped cream as a topping, select fat-free whipped cream at the supermarket for a flavor that's still very good.

For more intense flavor from pumpkin pie mix, add a bit of extra spice and a tablespoon of brown sugar.

For more daring pie, put in three tablespoons of rum.

Do over: When First Impressions are Bad

You don't always get a do-over in life but, with a little effort, people can help erase bad first impressions.

Remember that a bad first impression isn't always your fault.

According to author Heidi Grant Halvorson, author of No One Understands You and What to Do About It, impressions are based in biased thought patterns. People see what they expect to see (confirmation bias) and they tend to notice just a few things that may influence them later.

But, a bad impression might be your fault, even though it might not tell the whole story.

Say, for example, on your first day in a new city you are delayed by traffic and end up being late for a meeting. That performance could make a bad impression but now you know what traffic can be like. Be early for meetings for the rest of your career.

Stay patient.

You might poke fun at your blunder: Well! Now I know what traffic is like in XYZ city.

You can also point out common bonds with people: Sports teams you both like or music.

"Cyberspace" Coined: Neuromancer Published in October 1984

This month marks the anniversary of William Gibson's coining of the term "cyberspace" in his cult classic book Neuromancer. Released in 1984, his book was written when computers were not yet affordable or useful for the mainstream. Gibson envisioned a world in which hackers run rampant through a digital world offering visual hallucinations and a connected society that only recently emerged in the real world. To a young generation of computer fanatics, he has been considered a prophet for his work.
